

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

Foreword

IN the preparation of this volume which includes all of the publications of the Kelmscott and Doves Presses, I desire to say that I have had no part in the work as it is herein presented. The necessary collations and the arrangement of this bibliography have been made by my librarian, Robert Ernest Cowan, with the able collaboration of my first and second assistants, Cora Edgerton Sanders and Harrison Post. In deep appreciation of what they have done I desire here to express my sincere obligations.

November, 1921.

Introduction by Alfred W. Pollard

PRINTERS and publishers have to earn their living like other men and neither the one class nor the other has ever been conspicuously overpaid. It may fairly be said, indeed, that both have shewn themselves much more ready to cherish ideals, and to take moderate risks to put them into practice, than the average business man. During the century (reckoning from the various dates at which printing was introduced into different countries) in which this idealism was most fruitful the two businesses were generally united, as they were (save for a few books printed by Morris not at his own risk) in the case of the two presses with which this book is concerned. In the fifteenth century the number of men who took up printing not as a means of gaining a livelihood, but in order that the books which they wished to see published might be printed under their own eyes was very considerable. It was, indeed, to get a book of his own into print and save himself from overmuch copying that Caxton learnt the craft at Cologne and set up his press at Bruges, and it was to print the books which they wished to see printed and not for any gain (they had to rely on Cardinal Rolin as a patron to help to finance them) that Fichet and Heynlyn set up the first French press, at Paris in the Sorbonne, and summoned craftsmen from Switzerland to print their books.

In an article in "Bibliographica" (III.344-370) Anatole Claudin, despite some remonstrances from his editor, entitled Fichet and Heynlyn's venture a private press. The term private in connection with printing usually introduces confusion and this, I still think, was an example of its misuse. A press does not become a private press merely because it is lodged in a private building, as the Sorbonne no doubt may technically be reckoned. Printers like other craftsmen, have lived over their workshops and may do so still. For a press to be private a double qualification seems necessary: the books it prints must not be obtainable by any chance purchaser who offers a price for them and the owner must print for his own pleasure and not work for hire for other people. Books may be printed for private circulation at any press, and they may be privately printed by any printer, if he prints them for himself, and not on commission or for sale; but only presses which do no other work than this can be considered really private, and there have not been many of them.

Neither the Kelmscott nor the Doves Press was private, as I have ventured to define privacy as applied to printing. The books of both the one and the other by means of circulars were advertised as offered for sale, and to the best of my belief no good money was ever refused on account of the personal shortcomings of a would-be purchaser. Morris, moreover, besides at first employing Messrs. Reeves and Turner to sell his books, published "The Golden Legend," "The Recuyell of the Historyes of Troye," "The History of Reynard the Foxxe," and "The Book of Wisdom and Lies" through Mr. Quaritch, and other books through the owners or renters of the copyrights, viz.: Tennyson's "Maud" through Messrs. Macmillan, Ruskin's "The Nature of Gothic" through Mr. George Allen, and the two volumes of Rossetti's poems through Messrs. Ellis and Elvey. He also printed a special edition of Rossetti's "Hand and Soul" for Messrs. Way and Williams of Chicago, also a letter of Savonarola's for Mr. Fairfax Murray to give to his friends. He also did, and did most delightfully, some little bits of glorified jobbing work. Thus there are in existence two several forms of invitation to the annual gathering of the Hammersmith Socialist Society, a four-page leaflet for the Ancoats Brotherhood, an address to Sir Lowthian Bell from his work-people, a form of invitation to the unveiling of a bust of Keats, a slip giving the text of a memorial tablet to Dr. Thomas Sadler, scholarship certificates for the Technical Education Board of the London County Council, and a card for Associates of the Deaconess Institution for the Diocese of Rochester. For at least some of these Morris was presumably paid, and if any friend on the score of them had chaffed him with being a jobbing printer, I am sure that he would have taken it as a compliment to his wholesome freedom from affectation. No doubt if some rash person had walked into Kelmscott House and asked Morris to give an estimate for printing a book which Morris did not like, that rash person would have received a short answer. Still the fact remains that if (contrary to the present writer's opinion) privacy confers any special distinction on a press, the Kelmscott Press must be held to have forfeited this distinction on two grounds, sales to the public and working for hire, and the Doves Press on that of its sales.

The real virtue in both printing and publishing lies not in privacy, but in the vision of an ideal and its attainment, despite of difficulties and, it may be, pecuniary loss; and this virtue is visible in every book of both these presses, whether we regard them on their publishing side, or typographically. Both alike printed the books which their owners thought ought to be printed and none others (though perhaps now and again Morris was content to see a book through the eyes of his friend, Mr. F. S. Ellis) and both printers alike printed them in what they considered the best manner and, once again, in none other.

On the publishing side disinterested adventure has never wholly died out, though after the first century of printing (as defined above) it became much less common. The great scholar printers of the sixteenth century, Aldus Manutius and his successors and the Estiennes, found few and unadventurous followers, and the private patrons of printing, who relieved a printer of any fear of loss if he printed a book they liked, also became rarer. In England, where everything tended to happen a little later than on the continent, John Day and other careful printers found a good friend in Archbishop Parker and repaid him with excellent work.

Some forty years later Sir Henry Savile hired a London printer to come to work for him at Eton in producing a fine edition of the works of Saint Chrysostom, the first important contribution to scholarship published in England. Later in the seventeenth century Archbishop Laud, Lord Clarendon, and Bishop Fell all helped the Oxford University Press and thus laid the foundations from which it has risen to the position, which I think may be claimed for it, of the premier press of the world, a position nobly consolidated in the last forty years by its production of the great Oxford English dictionary. But there have been few imitators of the example thus set, and this not merely in England but in any country, even in the United States, where the wealth which in England is too often mainly devoted to founding a family is so munificent in its benefactions to education. This is a pity, as the work of a great press, not tied down to getting back its capital (with or without interest, in whole or in part) in too short a period, is in its own way as far-reaching as that of a great university. Indeed to train men as scholars and then to leave it impossible for them to get the results of their scholarship into print is the climax of the educational thoughtlessness which too lightly equips men and women for activities they are never likely to have a chance of exercising, however great their capacity.

The dying out of patrons of the press was to some extent made good by the development of the system of private patronage of individual authors, a system fraught with humiliation to the patronized and indirectly injurious to every author trying to make a living by his pen, but which lasted till the very end of the eighteenth century. With Minsheu's "Ductor in Linguas: the Guide to the Tongues," of 1617, we have the first example of the diffused patronage of the subscription edition, of which persons likely to be interested, or willing to help the author, are invited to pledge themselves to take one or more copies when published, and frequently to pay for them, wholly or in part, in advance, mostly with the inducement of a promise that their names shall be found printed in the volume when it appears. Subscription books are still with us, though they play a much less prominent part in literary life than they did when Dryden's "Virgil," Prior's "Poems on Several Occasions," and the Edinburgh edition of Burns were used as the means of presenting handsome testimonials to their authors. As regards some classes of more or less learned works the place of subscription editions has been taken by publishing societies, the members of which mostly accept a certain number of books which they do not want as a condition of obtaining those which they do. By such expedients any book which two or three hundred persons are conscious of wanting, which some one else is willing and able to produce, and which will cost not much more than five hundred pounds for print and paper, stands a very fair chance nowadays of coming into existence. But the machinery

William Morris, when he desired to print in the way he thought best some half hundred books by himself or by authors he admired, had recourse to none of these shifts. He was used to managing a business and had some capital at his command and the well-founded self-confidence of a great craftsman, and so he started printing in the belief that there would be enough book-lovers who would share his tastes to protect his enterprise from disaster. In case anyone should think that the enterprise was easy, it is interesting to remember that Ruskin had preceded Morris in publishing his own books, and a few others, in the style he thought good and had made but a poor success of his essays in book-production. Ruskin was a critic rather than a craftsman, and though he preached beautifully about books he could not have had much feeling for them, as books, or he would not have mutilated his thirteenth century Beaupré Antiphoner (despite its pretty appeal to future possessors to take good care of it) and similar treasures by cutting out leaves from them to give away. When he caused his own works to be printed under his supervision in the 'seventies of the last century his lack of feeling for book-craft betrayed itself in margins wrongly distributed, in a type-page seamed with excessive spaces between the lines, title-pages which tease the eyes by their lack of concentration and restfulness, and a binding in full purple calf, now usually found scratched, rubbed, and peeling, and faded to an ugly bluish gray.

Morris could not have made such mistakes as those in which Ruskin acquiesced, because he was not only a great craftsman but an expert, trained not to accept any modern standards of bookwork without testing them by those set up by the old books he loved, and too wary to use materials without making sure that they were sound. It is only fair, however, to remember that he had from the first the advantage of the technical advice of Mr. Emery Walker, whose part in the development of fine printing in England can hardly be over-emphasized. It is indeed from Mr. Walker's article on printing in the Catalogue of the first Arts and Crafts Exhibition, held at the "New Gallery," in the autumn of 1888, that the whole development must be dated. It is true that long before this, so Mr. S. C. Cockerell tells us in his "Short History and Description of the Kelmscott Press" (appended to Morris's own "Note" on the Press), Morris had planned, illustrated, and decorated editions of two of his own works, but without bringing them to the point of appearance. Mr. Cockerell writes:

"As early as 1866 an edition of 'The Earthly Paradise' was projected, which was to have been a folio in double columns, profusely illustrated by Sir Edward Burne-Jones, and typographically superior to the books of that time. The designs for the stories of 'Cupid and Psyche,' 'Pygmalion and the Image,' the 'Ring given to Venus,' and the 'Hill of Venus,' were finished, and forty-four of those for 'Cupid and Psyche' were engraved on wood in line somewhat in the manner of the early German masters. About thirty-five of the blocks were executed by William Morris himself. . . . Specimen pages were set up in Caxton type and in the Chiswick Press type afterwards used in the 'House of the Wolfings,' but for various reasons the project went no further. Four or five years later there was a plan for an illustrated edition of 'Love is Enough' for which two initial L's and seven side ornaments were drawn and engraved by William Morris. Another marginal ornament was engraved by him from a design by Sir E. Burne-Jones, who also drew a picture for the frontispiece, which has now been engraved by W. H. Hooper for the final page of the Kelmscott Press edition of the work. These side ornaments are more delicate than any that were designed for the Kelmscott Press, but they shew that when the Press was started the idea of reviving some of the decorative features of the earliest printed books had been long in the Founder's mind."

It has not been my good fortune to see the specimen pages of "The Earthly Paradise" in Caxton and Chiswick Press types of which Mr. Cockerell writes. If copies of them exist it would be interesting to know whether Morris in them kept wholly clear of the bad contemporary influences to which Ruskin succumbed. That any work he did would have been "typographically superior to the books of that time" goes without saying. But the difficulty of breaking away from the tyranny of accustomed forms is very great, and it would be surprising if Morris gained his freedom at a bound. During the busy years which separated early experiments from performance he had not only studied fine manuscripts but had written them himself, and in 1888*

After the success of the Kelmscott books I had a curious proof of this in the behaviour of a little stream of would-be fine printers who came to me at the British Museum asking to be shewn fifteenth century types which could be used as models for new founts. The result was almost invariably the same. The general effect of the old pages was warmly admired, and then the points in which individual characters differed from the types to which the enquirers were used would be picked out one after the other as blots which it would be well to eliminate. The enquirers seemed to desire that the whole should be different, while all the component parts should be assimilated to the types to which they were accustomed.*

was beginning to buy the specimens of fifteenth century printing and book-decoration in which he found useful suggestions, rather than models, when he came to print.

The first results of the Arts and Crafts Exhibition of 1888, and of the communings with Mr. Walker to which it gave rise, were three new editions: (1) Morris's "The House of the Wolfings" in the special type "modelled on an old Basel fount" which had been used for one of the specimen pages of the proposed edition of "The Earthly Paradise" in 1866; (2) "The Roots of the Mountains" (the finest of Morris's prose romances) in the same type, with some small improvements; (3) the translation of the "Gunnlaug Saga," in a type imitated from one of Caxton's founts, with spaces left, in Caxton's manner, for the capital initials to be supplied by hand. All these were printed at the Chiswick Press and represented a substantial advance on the best nineteenth century work that had yet been done; but Morris was now determined to have a press of his own and though unable to persuade Mr. Walker to go into partnership with him as a printer, was sure of his enthusiastic support.

Morris did not print all the books he wished to print. A projected Froissart and a projected Shakespeare were frustrated by his death and at an earlier stage a proposal to reprint the fifteenth century "Lives of the Fathers" ("Vitas Patrum," as book-lovers call them, with an affectionate retention of the accusative case, which, like the genitive, sometimes makes an ungrammatical appearance in medieval titles) elicited so few promises of support that it was abandoned. It is probable, too, that of the fifty-three books which were ultimately placed to his credit many were outside any programme with which he started. But the books which he printed in those wonderful six years of work fall into a few fairly well defined classes, and we must think of him primarily as a lover of poems and romances and old chronicles, who designed types and ornaments to fit the books he wanted to print. Many of his imitators searched first for a fine type and then looked about for books to print with it. But Morris was impelled to print, as Caxton was impelled, by the desire to get definite books set up in type of his own making. Caxton, indeed, had anticipated many of Morris's tastes and something of his temper,—but was very unlike him as a craftsman!

Of the fifty-three books issued from the Kelmscott Press twenty-two were written or translated by Morris himself; five were reprints of books first printed by Caxton; the splendid Chaucer and its appendix, "The Floure and the Leafe," and other Chauceriana, with the three-verse romances from the Thornton manuscript, make up five more; then we have two Latin devotional books ("Psalmi Penitentiales" and "Laudes Beatae Mariae Virginis"); eight "modern" books with the choosing as well as the editing of which Mr. F. S. Ellis probably had a good deal to do (Cavendish's "Life of Wolsey," Robinson's translation of More's "Utopia," Spencer's "Shepherd's Calendar," Shakespeare's "Poems and Sonnets," selections from Herrick, selections from Coleridge, the poems of Keats, and a Shelley in three volumes); another eight books connected with other friends (Rossetti's "Poems" and "Hand and Soul," Tennyson's "Maud," Ruskin's "Nature of Gothic," Swinburne's "Atalanta in Calydon," Blunt's "Love Lyrics," Mackail's "Biblia Innocentium," and the letter of Savonarola printed for Mr. Fairfax Murray. These make up the half century, with Lady Wilde's translation of "Siddonia the Sorceress," Oliver Wardrop's translation of the Georgian stories called "The Book of Wisdom and Lies," and the two trial pages of Froissart's "Chronicles," as the odd three.

As was natural, Morris took it for granted that he must start with a Roman type, and his first seven books were all printed in this, including two which, according to a scheme he seems afterwards to have worked out, should have been in small Gothic. These are Caxton's "Golden Legend," from which the Roman type was rather inappropriately dubbed "Golden," and Morris's own prose romance, "The Story of the Glittering Plain," the first book from the Press. With these two exceptions books with old subjects, or written before the close of the fifteenth century, were printed in Gothic types, the sizes from small quarto to sexto-decimo, with the double columned folios of Chaucer and the intended Froissart, in small Gothic ("Chaucer" type), and in larger Gothic ten large quartos, viz.: "The Recuyell of the Historyes of Troye" (whence the type's name, "Troy" type), Caxton's "Reynard the Foxe," Caxton's "Godefrey of Boloyne," the second edition of "The Story of the Glittering Plain" with Walter Crane's illustrations, Swinburne's "Atalanta in Calydon," Morris's own version of "Beowulf," his "Life and Death of Jason," the "Laudes Beatae Mariae Virginis," "The Floure and the Leafe," and "Love is Enough." All the modern books, including Morris's "Poems by the Way," "The Defence of Guenevere and other poems," and "The Earthly Paradise," are in Roman type; his prose romances (after the first edition of "The Glittering Plain") in Chaucer type. It is interesting to note that Morris used his Troy type for the two classical subjects, "Atalanta in Calydon" and "Jason." Perhaps he took the medieval view of Greek legend and classed them roughly with the romances.

It will be seen that Morris's three types served for all, or very nearly all, his needs. He talked at times of having the Golden type cut in a larger size, and to have done this would have enabled him to give to some of his modern books the dignity of large quarto, and have supplied a convenient type for headings. But he got on very well with his three types and his best English successors have been economically content with one apiece.

As to the technical history of these types there is nothing much to add to Mr. Cockerell's notes on them, save perhaps to emphasize the fact that Morris did not imitate his fifteenth century models at all closely. It must be said also that he was singularly fortunate in his punch-cutter, Mr. Prince. At the risk of perhaps seeming fanciful I am impelled to add that the most remarkable feature of all three types, in my personal experience of them, is that they are not only beautiful but (to use the best word I can hit on) delightfully "friendly." The fact may be disguised from those who are so unaccustomed to Gothic and Black-letter characters of any kind that any fount of such type inevitably seems to them strange and formal. But to those who are at all used to old types Morris's Gothic, whether in its smaller size or larger, Chaucer or Troy, must surely seem jollier and more delightful even than the old types they love best, but (to use the other word which is the best I can find to express my meaning) not at all "ceremonial."

Morris did not print books as so many testimonials to the respect or reverence in which he regarded them or their authors. He printed long books, many of them story books which he loved reading himself and which he wanted other people to have the pleasure of reading in jolly editions. The fifty-three books he printed, or planned to print, are all eminently readable. There are still some of them I have not read, but I look forward to a leisure time in which I shall make good my omissions, though it is possible I may find myself wishing that Mr. F. S. Ellis had been content with a single volume of the best of Shelley (instead of three volumes of all his poems), as he was content with single volumes of Herrick and Coleridge. But, with this one exception, to anyone who cares at all for poetry and romance the Kelmscott books are extraordinarily attractive, and the beautiful types, while they inspire a sub-conscious pleasure, do not divert my attention from the text.

On the other hand the types which I class as ceremonial, the finest of which, the finest ceremonial type ever cut, is the perfected Jenson of the Doves Press, do divert my attention. It is very important to have good ceremonial types. It is very important to have a genius for ceremonial such as is possessed by most other European nations, but does not thrive easily in the atmosphere of the British Isles. But ceremony, though quite admirable in its place and season, is apt to become frigid if too prolonged, and I must confess to being unable to read more than twenty or thirty pages in the Doves Press type without feeling perceptibly chilled. It was a stroke of genius on the part of Messrs. Walker and Sanderson, or whichever of them first had the idea, to dissipate this frigidity, with the daring and magnificently successful red capitals which were first used, if I am not mistaken, in their reprint of Milton's "Paradise Lost." With Morris's types red ink is almost a superfluity: they are so rich and hospitable themselves that red adds little to them, is sometimes indeed mainly useful, not in heightening the glow of a page, but in moderating it, an effect still more noticeable in the case of the blue capitals which appear in the "Laudes Beatae Mariae Virginis" and "Love is Enough."

The splendour of Morris's borders and large initial capitals, more especially of the capitals in the Chaucer which contain a whole word, is too self-evident for a plain man to wish to enlarge on it. Morris's old friend, Dr. F. J. Furnivall, used to regret that Morris, who was pre-eminently a "thirteenth century man," had not followed thirteenth century models in his book building and invented lighter and gayer ornaments. It is true that Morris's decoration is, now and again, too black and massive for his Golden type and that Mr. W. H. Hooper's renderings of the delicate drawings of Sir Edward Burne-Jones tend at times to be over-heavy. But Morris had the need for harmonizing his capitals and borders with the tones of his different types constantly in his mind, and he was certainly wise in not attempting to translate thirteenth century illuminations, with their glory of varied colour, into the black and white (or black, white, and red) of a printed book. He was content to set himself to match the fifteenth century printers and woodcutters and he beat them easily on their own ground, just as a Doves Press book easily and decisively excels any that Nicolas Jenson ever printed. Apart from the charm that comes from freshness and experiment, apart also from the profusion of capitals hand-painted in blue and red (the more ambitiously coloured letters seldom attain the standard of good manuscripts) that light up so many of the German books and a few others in the first thirty or forty years of printing, it is not in the books of the fifteenth century itself, but in those of these two presses that we see fifteenth century ideals carried to full attainment.

Most readers are very conservative as to the form of the books they use. This conservatism did not fail to assert itself in respect of Morris's revolution in the ideals of modern printing, but his success was both quick and great. During his six years' work, books came from his press at the rate of seven a year, some in more than one volume. The pace was inconveniently fast for his less wealthy disciples, but it was wonderfully exciting to have a new Kelmscott book appearing every other month or oftener, and Morris died at the very height of his success, when the great Chaucer was being acclaimed for what it is, the finest book in its style that has ever been printed.

Morris's success naturally attracted imitators and put new heart, and also new ideas, into the few adventurers who were already experimenting with print and paper. The story of these other presses is well told and well illustrated in one of the Riccardi Press books, "The Revival of Printing," a bibliographical catalogue of works issued by the chief modern English presses, with an introduction by Robert Steele (1912). Herbert Horne and Professor Selwyn Image had been experimenting in the "Century Guild Hobbyhorse" and had been already helped to get closer to their ideals by Mr. Emery Walker, who has helped most of those who have experimented with any success in printing during the last thirty years. Mr. Horne, a slow, fastidious worker, with most admirable good taste and much patient skill, subsequently produced three Roman founts of real beauty, a Montallegro type for Mr. Updike's Merrymount Press at Boston (1904), the Florence type for Messrs. Chatto and Windus (1909), the Riccardi type for the Riccardi Press (1909). Professor Selwyn Image designed a Greek type for Messrs. Macmillan, not wholly successful, but in a style which should have secured for it a better welcome than it received. Another enthusiast, already at work when Morris started, Mr. Charles Ricketts, had been content to use Caslon types at his Vale Press, but in 1896 designed an excellent round Roman, called after his press, Vale type, with which he printed quite a long series of pleasantly decorated books. He subsequently produced an "Avon" Roman type (also good), and a King's type in which minuscule and majuscule forms are mixed as in Latin half-uncials, but with a good deal less harmony between them than the sixth-century scribes had enforced. Mr. St. John Hornby, after experiments with Caslon and Fell types became possessed (with the help of Messrs. Emery Walker and S. C. Cockerell and of Morris's punch-cutter, Mr. Prince) of a most beautiful Gothic fount modeled on the Subiaco type of Sweynheym and Pannartz. This had been much beloved by Morris, who himself had tried to adapt it, but could not please himself. Beginning with a delightful edition of Dante's "Inferno" in 1902, Mr. Hornby has printed in this type at his Ashendene Press a series of charming and stately books, including a complete Dante, which demand a dissertation to themselves. Robert Proctor, again with the help of Mr. Walker and Mr. Prince, based on an incomplete Greek fount (lacking some majuscules) used for the New Testament in the Complutensian Polyglott his Otter type, incomparably the finest Greek fount yet designed, but (alas) only saw it himself in a trial sheet of majuscules and in proofs of an "Oresteia" which was completed and issued after his death in 1904.

As to the effect of Morris's example in the United States, I write as one afar off and fear to venture on dates. Mr. Updike, I think, was the earliest American experimenter in the field and soon developed the fine eclecticism and craftsmanship which lend distinction to all the work of his Merrymount Press. Of Mr. Bruce Rogers, I have already written more than once as one of the finest printers who have ever lived, and with a very special gift for working, in the style of any country or period in which the book to be reprinted originally belonged, and getting at the heart of that style. Both Mr. Updike and Mr. Rogers take their ideals rather from the best work after 1500 than from that of the first printers. Mr. Rogers, indeed, in the latest examples of his printing I have seen, has eclipsed Robert Estienne on his own ground, much as the Doves Press has eclipsed Nicolas Jenson. But while their ideals thus differ from those of Morris, there can be little doubt that his success created their opportunity. A third American printer whose work I know and admire, Mr. Clarke Conwell, at his Elston Press at New Rochelle, produced some charming books both in Roman and Black-letter, alike unpretentious and very pleasant to read, and, I should think, would probably be content to reckon himself a disciple of Morris.

The best of the presses here mentioned have achieved notable successes and I think it is fair to claim that none of them would have done so, few of them, indeed, would have come into existence, had not Morris shown what might yet be made of printing and also proved that there was a sufficient market for finely printed books for their production, at least on a small scale, to be commercially possible.

Much was thus done by others on both sides of the Atlantic to carry out the ideals of fine printing to which Morris had opened the eyes of book-lovers; yet in a very special sense the Doves Press which began work in 1901, five years after his death, was the true heir of his invention. Most of the other English experimenters have tried to do what Morris did, and have done it, sometimes admirably well, sometimes badly. Messrs. Walker and Sanderson showed themselves strong enough to carry out Morris's ideals on independent lines; they supplement his work rather than compete with it. They showed their strength at the outset by recognizing their limitations. They thought that they could not themselves produce, or find anyone else to produce, ornament as good as Morris's and, therefore, they began by discarding ornament altogether. In the same spirit, instead of essaying the difficult task of evolving a homogeneous type out of hints and impressions gained from studying several fifteenth century models, they took a single type, the Roman fount used by Nicolas Jenson, the first in craftsmanship, though not in time of the early Venetian printers, and gave this a perfection of form such as Jenson was never able to attain, just as under Mr. Walker's influence and with Mr. Prince as their punch-cutter, Mr. St. John Hornby and Mr. Proctor respectively developed the Subiaco Gothic and the Complutensian Greek into founts which far surpassed their respective originals. Of the splendid success of the introduction of the daring red capitals which make the first two pages of their text of "Paradise Lost" one of the most effective "openings" in all book-craft, something has already been said. With a single type and no other decoration than red printing and occasionally red capitals, the books are classic in their simplicity and each one (with the possible exception of the five volume Bible, a splendid book, which yet hardly justifies the endless pains bestowed on it) is, perhaps, primarily to be looked on as a testimonial to some great writer. Thus in his "Catalogue Raisonné" of 1908, Mr. Cobden-Sanderson writes:

"To-day there is an immense reproduction in an admirable cheap form, of all Books which, in any language, have stood the test of time. But such reproduction is not a substitute for the more monumental production of the same works, and whether by the Doves Press or some other press or presses, such monumental production, expressive of man's admiration, is a legitimate ambition and a public duty. Great thoughts deserve, and demand, a great setting, whether in building, sculpture, ceremonial or otherwise; and the great works of literature have again and again to be set forth in forms suitable to their magnitude. And this it is the business of the Printing Press to undertake and achieve."

The ideal here set forth is a worthy one, worthily expressed. "Such monumental production, expressive of man's admiration, is" as Mr. Sanderson asserts, "a legitimate ambition and a public duty," and for this high ceremonial in book-form it is difficult to conceive any type more fitted in its graceful and clean-cut strength than that which has been used for flawless tributes of reverence to Shakespeare, Milton and Goethe, to Wordsworth, Tennyson and Browning, Emerson, Carlyle and Ruskin, William Caxton and William Morris.

What has been the result on others of Morris's six years' adventure in the craft of printing? Perhaps the greatest of all is that many book-lovers have been educated by his Kelmscott books to appreciate good printing when it is offered them, and to be willing to pay for it, even a little more they can easily afford. To bring this about, as Morris did for the book-lovers of his own day was, at least for a time, to make the publishing of fine books much easier, and thus, as I have suggested, all the other essayists in fine printing who were at work within a few years after Morris's death profited by his enterprise. He postponed the need for a Society for the Encouragement of Fine Printing and very much reduced and simplified the work which such a society should undertake. There is no reason in societies being formed to take up work which can be done without their aid, and Morris who, though his own work went largely unremunerated, was liberal in his payment of others, led experimenters to hope that a press for fine printing could at least be made to pay its expenses, and leave a little over for its owner. By inspiring this hope Morris called new presses into existence and heartened those men who were already at work to acquire new types and make bolder experiments.

Something has already been said as to those on both sides of the Channel whom his example thus stimulated. In England, a quarter of a century after Morris's death, Mr. St. John Hornby's Ashendene Press, which seems to go from strength to strength, is the only one founded under the Kelmscott influence which is still active. On the other hand quite a number of young commercial printers are doing admirable work which would have been impossible thirty years ago, and the standard attained in the technical schools is almost tragically high, tragically, because until Morris's ideals are still further popularized the lads, when they become journeymen, are often given no chance to print as well as they can. In the United States Mr. Berkeley Updike is still at work and Mr. Bruce Rogers, who in a visit to England during the War set a new standard at the Cambridge University Press, is in his prime, a national asset somewhat imperfectly utilized. Moreover, as in England, there are other firms which, though mainly occupied in doing the work that comes along, do it all the better because William Morris for the last six years of his life was a master of their craft.

Passing from this spiritual influence to things which can be tested and measured there are four points in which Morris's practice can definitely be taken as a guide and has to a considerable (though insufficient) extent, been so taken.

I. GOOD INK. At the outset the importance of this was very imperfectly understood by his early disciples. They saw that any page printed by Morris looked rich and black, instead of thin and gray, and they tried to attain this effect by using types with thick faces and crowding on ink, thus sacrificing all delicacy of outline. It took them some time to realize that whereas they were paying (in England) a few shillings a pound for ink, Morris was paying fifteen, and that with good ink there was no need for thick faced types and heavy inking. The importance of good ink is now better appreciated, but anyone who is having a book printed for him will still be wise to bind his printer to pay the market price for a really good ink. If this price is paid, there will be less need to take precautions against over inking.

2. GOOD SPACING. In a printed page there are spaces between letter and letter (caused by the "body" of the type being larger than the "face"), between word and word, and between line and line. Morris minimized all three. His practice has been challenged by good printers and (on the score of easier legibility) a case can be argued for more spacing than he allowed. But no spacing can be right which is uneven and the coincidence of spaces between words coming one under the other on several successive lines, so as to form what printers call a "river" of white, is one of the greatest faults that can disfigure a printed page.

3. THE PLACING OF CAPITALS. Every large initial letter (properly called a capital, as beginning a "capitulum" or chapter) ought to range exactly with a given number of lines of the type with which it is used. If it cannot be so fitted, it is better to use no ornamental letters at all. The early printers understood this, but their successors, when they had capitals in stock, used them with types with which they could not be made to range, so that the capital was separated by a white space from the type beneath it. To match this white beneath the capital the practice grew up of leaving a corresponding white space separating the capital from the type at its side. A "river" was thus formed flowing along two sides of the capital into the sea of the inner margin. Moreover, as it is usual to print the letters completing the word begun by the capital in majuscules, the first of these majuscules was placed across the river to form a "bridge." This "river" and "bridge" arrangement, when Morris began to print, was part of the practice even of the best British printers, though these kept their rivers small, while the bad printers rejoiced to have them broad. I regret to say that the "river" and "bridge" arrangement may be observed in the placing of the beautiful capitals which I persuaded Mr. Laurence Housman to design for "Bibliographica," but which by my own lack of foresight were not made exactly to fit the type with which they were to be used.

4. MARGINS. As to these Morris's practice was perfect, but it must be admitted that he darkened counsel by quoting with apparent approval in his "Note" on the Kelmscott Press the dictum of "the librarian of one of our most important private libraries" to the effect that "the mediæval rule was to make a difference of 20 per cent from margin to margin." The librarian in question must have formulated this rule from sadly cropped copies. The proportion in Morris's folios and octavos agrees very closely with the fifteenth century practice, where this is studied in uncut copies, and runs: Inner margin 7; Upper 9; Outer 17*; Lower 23; whereas "a difference of 20 per cent" would change these figures to $7\frac{1}{2}$; 9; $10\frac{4}{5}$; 13. The outer margin which Morris used was thus nearly two and a half times the inner, instead of nearly one and a half times as in the prescription he quoted, and in like manner the lower margin is nearly two and a half (not one and a half) times the outer. Moreover, Morris, like all the best fifteenth century printers adjusted these margins to type pages of equally definite proportions. Taking the height of a page as 100, the height of the type page would be 68, or very near it, the upper margin 9, the lower 23. Corresponding to a height of 100, the breadth of the folio or octavo page would be 68 or 69 (about exactly the height of the type page), the breadth of the type page being 45 (in a quarto 47), the inner margin 7, the outer 17 (in a quarto 18). I have not measured all the Kelmscott margins and they may vary for special reasons (e.g. in order not to break up the stanzas of a poem) but as all the Kelmscott books are more or less of the same degree of "luxury" I think the proportions here given will be found to apply pretty generally. Now for the sake of greater luxury, though greater luxury is not often advisable, the margins may be allowed to encroach further on the type page by some 10 per cent, and if the proportions of inner and outer, upper and lower are observed, the page will still look well. And if, for the sake of greater economy, instead of the margins encroaching 10 per cent on the type page, the type page is allowed to encroach 10 per cent on the margins, all may still be well, as long as the proportion of the margins is still constant at 7, 9, 17, 23.

All this may seem a little complicated but the whole doctrine of margins can be summed up in the simple rule that the height of the type page should be about equal to the breadth of the paper and the breadth of the type page about 70 per cent of the height, inner and upper margins bearing to outer and lower ones the proportion of about two to five.

On all these four points here set forth, the use of good ink, careful spacing, the right placing of capitals, and the right proportions of margins, definite progress has been made since Morris began to print, and any book-buyer who wishes to honour Morris's memory in a practical way cannot do better than use whatever influence he possesses with book-sellers, publishers, and printers to protest against any breach of his practice, which was the practice also of all the old masters of the craft. Moreover if the book-buyer has any money to spare he will put it to a good use by encouraging on a small or on a large scale the publishers who give printers a chance of doing good work, and discouraging those who do not. Of course the publishers deserve support for the matter of the books they publish as well as for their form, but that is another story, not my present concern.

ALFRED W. POLLARD.

Note by William Morris on His Aims in Founding the Kelmscott Press

IBEGAN printing books with the hope of producing some which would have a definite claim to beauty, while at the same time they should be easy to read and should not dazzle the eye, or trouble the intellect of the reader by eccentricity of form in the letters. I have always been a great admirer of the calligraphy of the Middle Ages, & of the earlier printing which took its place. As to the fifteenth-century books, I had noticed that they were always beautiful by force of the mere typography, even without the added ornament, with which many of them are so lavishly supplied. And it was the essence of my undertaking to produce books which it would be a pleasure to look upon as pieces of printing and arrangement of type. Looking at my adventure from this point of view then, I found I had to consider chiefly the following things: the paper, the form of the type, the relative spacing of the letters, the words, and the lines; and lastly the position of the printed matter on the page.

It was a matter of course that I should consider it necessary that the paper should be hand-made, both for the sake of durability and appearance. It would be a very false economy to stint in the quality of the paper as to price: so I had only to think about the kind of hand-made paper. On this head I came to two conclusions: 1st, that the paper must be wholly of linen (most hand-made papers are of cotton today), and must be quite 'hard,' i.e., thoroughly well sized; and 2nd, that, though it must be 'laid' and not 'wove' (i.e., made on a mould made of obvious wires), the lines caused by the wires of the mould must not be too strong, so as to give a ribbed appearance. I found that on these points I was at one with the practice of the papermakers of the fifteenth century; so I took as my model a Bolognese paper of about 1473. My friend Mr. Batchelor, of Little Chart, Kent, carried out my views very satisfactorily, & produced from the first the excellent paper which I still use.

Next as to type. By instinct rather than by conscious thinking it over, I began by getting myself a fount of Roman type. And here what I wanted was letter pure in form; severe, without needless excrescences; solid, without the thickening and thinning of the line, which is the essential fault of the ordinary modern type, and which makes it difficult to read; and not compressed laterally, as all later type has grown to be owing to commercial exigencies. There was only one source from which to take examples of this perfected Roman type, to wit, the works of the great Venetian printers of the fifteenth century, of whom Nicholas Jenson produced the completest & most Roman characters from 1470 to 1476. This type I studied with much care, getting it photographed to a big scale, & drawing it over many times before I began designing my own letter; so that though I think I mastered the essence of it, I did not copy it servilely; in fact, my Roman type, especially in the lower case, tends rather more to the Gothic than does Jenson's.

After a while I felt that I must have a Gothic as well as a Roman fount; and herein the task I set myself was to redeem the Gothic character from the charge of unreadableness which is commonly brought against it. And I felt that this charge could not be reasonably brought against the types of the first two decades of printing: that Schoeffer at Mainz, Mentelin at Strasburg, and Gunther Zainer at Augsburg, avoided the spiky ends and undue compression which lay some of the later type open to the above charge. Only the earlier printers (naturally following therein the practice of their predecessors the scribes) were very liberal of contractions, and used an excess of 'tied' letters, which, by the way, are very useful to the compositor. So I entirely eschewed contractions, except for the '&,' and had very few tied letters, in fact none but the absolutely necessary ones. Keeping my end steadily in view, I designed a black-letter type which I think I may claim to be as readable as a Roman one, and to say the truth I prefer it to the Roman. This type is of the size called Great Primer (the Roman type is of 'English' size); but later on I was driven by the necessities of the Chaucer (a double-columned book) to get a smaller Gothic type of Pica size.

The punches for all these types, I may mention, were cut for me with great intelligence and skill by Mr. E. P. Prince, and render my designs most satisfactorily.

Now as to the spacing: First, the 'face' of the letter should be as nearly conterminous with the 'body' as possible, so as to avoid undue whites between the letters. Next, the lateral spaces between the words should be (a) no more than is necessary to distinguish clearly the division into words, and (b) should be as nearly equal as possible. Modern printers, even the best, pay very little heed to these two essentials of seemly composition, and the inferior ones run riot in licentious spacing, thereby producing, inter alia, those ugly rivers of lines running about the page which are such a blemish to decent printing. Third, the whites between the lines should not be excessive; the modern practice of 'leading' should be used as little as possible, and never without some definite reason, such as marking some special piece of printing. The only leading I have allowed myself is in some cases a 'thin' lead between the lines of my Gothic pica type: in the Chaucer and the double-columned books I have used a 'hair' lead, and not even this in the 16mo books. Lastly, but by no means least, comes the position of the printed matter on the page. This should always leave the inner margin the narrowest, the top somewhat wider, the outside (fore-edge) wider still, and the bottom widest of all. This rule is never departed from in mediæval books, written or printed. Modern printers systematically transgress against it; thus apparently contradicting the fact that the unit of a book is not one page, but a pair of pages. A friend, the librarian of one of our most important private libraries, tells me that after careful testing he has come to the conclusion that the mediæval rule was to make a difference of 20 per cent. from margin to margin. Now these matters of spacing and position are of the greatest importance in the production of beautiful books; if they are properly considered they will make a book printed in quite ordinary type at least decent and pleasant to the eye. The disregard of them will spoil the effect of the best designed type.

It was only natural that I, a decorator by profession, should attempt to ornament my books suitably: about this matter, I will only say that I have always tried to keep in mind the necessity for making my decoration a part of the page of type. I may add that in designing the magnificent and inimitable woodcuts which have adorned several of my books, and will above all adorn the Chaucer which is now drawing near completion, my friend Sir Edward Burne-Jones has never lost sight of this important point, so that his work will not only give us a series of most beautiful and imaginative pictures, but form the most harmonious decoration possible to the printed book.

300 copies were printed in Golden type.

ILLUSTRATIONS: There are numerous woodcut initials throughout the text.

This is the first work of the Kelmscott Press to be bound in limp vellum, and the only one lettered by hand on the back.

The book is a reprint of the edition published in 1889, by Reeves and Turner. It is divided into three parts: "The Defence of Guenevere" poems suggested by Malory's "Morte d'Arthur," the first page of the text being within an elaborate woodcut border; "Sir Peter Harpdon's End," poems inspired by Froissart's "Chronicles," the first page of the text being within an elaborate woodcut border; "Rapunzel" and other poems, the first page of the text having a half border. The text is in black and red.

The purity of the text of this edition has been criticized at length by Mr. H. Buxton Forman in his work, "The Books of William Morris," 1897.

There were 425 copies printed in Chaucer type, in black and red, with headings to the longer poems in Troy type.

ILLUSTRATIONS: There are 87 woodcut illustrations by Sir Edward Burne-Jones, engraved by W. H. Hooper, each within a narrow woodcut border. One hundred and fifteen pages of the text are within elaborate woodcut borders, in fourteen different designs all by Morris, as are the full-page woodcut title, the twenty-six large initial words, and the numerous initials of different sizes which are throughout the text, engraved by C. E. Keates, W. H. Hooper, and W. Spielmeier.

This book is the supreme achievement of the Kelmscott Press. In 1891, Morris conceived the idea of printing a Chaucer from a type which he planned to design. The Troy type was the result, but finding it too large, he had it recut in the size known as pica, calling it the Chaucer type. It was not until the list of December, 1892, that an announcement of the Chaucer as in preparation is made; in various lists up to December,

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

1894, small notes concerning the work are given, and then on December 1, of the same year, a list appeared giving full information and announcing that all of the copies, which had been increased to 425, had been sold. The book was completed a year and nine months after the printing of the first sheet.

225 copies were printed in Golden type, in black and red.

ILLUSTRATIONS: There are borders on pages 4, 5, 120, and 121; a half-border is on page 1, and numerous initials are throughout the text.

These were the first books printed on the paper with the apple watermark. None of the ten different borders were used in any other books. The colophons differ only in the date of issue: Vol. I is May 7, 1896; Vol. II is June 24, 1896; Vol. III is August 24, 1896; Vol. IV is November 25, 1896; Vol. V is December 24, 1896; Vol. VI is February 18, 1897; Vol. VII is March 17, 1897; Vol. VIII is June 10, 1897.

William Morris died October 3, 1896, so, beginning with Volume IV, the imprints read: "Printed by the Trustees of the late William Morris," etc.

CONDITION: Small 4°, gray boards, linen back, uncut.

FIRST EDITION.

COLLATION: Three preliminary blank leaves, [a1]-[a3]; Title as above, [a4] (verso blank); Text, "The Floure and the Leafe," in black and red, b1-[c7] (verso blank), pp. 1-[30]; Text, "The Boke of Cupide," etc., in black and red, [c8]-[d7], pp. 31-46; Note, and colophon as above, [d8] (verso blank), in eights, pp. 47-[48].

300 copies were printed in Troy type, with last page in Chaucer type. There are woodcut initial words on pages 1 and 31.

These poems were formerly attributed to Chaucer, but it has now been proved that "The Floure and the Leafe" is much later than Chaucer, and "The Boke of Cupide" was written by Sir Thomas Clanvowe about 1405.

MORRIS, WILLIAM.

The Water Of The Wondrous Isles || By William Morris

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

[COLOPHON]: Here ends The Water of the Wondrous Isles, written|| by William Morris. It was printed at the Kelmscott|| Press, Upper Mall, Hammersmith, in the County of || Middlesex, & finished on the first day of April, 1897.|| [Printer's ornament.] The borders and ornaments were designed entirely|| by William Morris, except the initial words Whilom|| & Empty, which were completed from his unfinished|| designs by R. Catterson-Smith. CONDITION: 4°, full vellum, uncut, with green silk ties.

FIRST EDITION.

COLLATION: Three preliminary blank leaves, [a1]-[a3]; Title as above, [a4] (verso blank); Text, in black and red, [b1]-z2, ending with colophon as above, in eights, pp. [1]-340; Large Kelmscott device and "Sold by the Trustees of the late William Morris || at the Kelmscott Press," [z3] (verso blank), pp. [341]-[342]; Blank leaf, [z4].

250 copies were printed in Chaucer type, in double columns, with a few lines in Troy type at the end of each of the seven parts.

ILLUSTRATIONS: The first page of the text of each of the seven parts is within an elaborate woodcut border, five different designs being used. The text of six of the parts begins with a large woodcut initial word, all of which were designed by Morris. The words "Whilom" and "Empty" were unfinished when the death of Morris occurred, so the designs were completed by R. Catterson-Smith. There are numerous half-borders, marginal ornaments, and initials throughout the text.

Mr. Morris began this story in verse, later changing it to prose.

FIRST EDITION.

A trial leaf, first printing (recto and verso), before the woodcut borders, large initials, and printing in red had been included.

It had been the intention of Mr. Morris to issue this work in two volumes as a worthy companion for the Chaucer. The plan was finally abandoned as announced in the prospectus of the "Shepheardes Calender," dated November 12, 1896. Thirty-four pages were then in type, but no sheet had been printed. The type was broken up on December 24, 1896, but before that event thirty-two copies of sixteen of these pages were printed and distributed to friends as a memento of Morris. The specimen pages on vellum were of later inspiration and the initials show distinct differences.

FROISSART, SIR JOHN.

Here Begynneth The Prologe Of Syr Johan Frois-|| sart Of

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

The Chronicles Of Fraunce, Inglande, And||Other Places Ad-joynyng

[COLOPHON]: Designed by William Morris, and printed at the Kelmscott Press, September, 1897.

CONDITION: Folio. Two specimen pages on vellum of the projected edition.

160 trial pages were printed in Chaucer type on vellum, with heading in Troy type, in black and red. No copies were issued on paper.

The first page of the text is within an elaborate woodcut border, containing the shields of France, the Empire, and England. The second page has a half-border with the shields of Reginald Lord Cobham, Sir John Chandos, and Sir Walter Manny. The first large initial is part of the border, and there are two other large initials and a few of smaller size in the text. All these were designed by Morris, but the half-border was engraved by W. Spielmeier and the large border by C. E. Keates.

Mr. Morris had intended to make this work a "worthy companion to the Chaucer," and to issue it in two volumes, with frontispiece by E.
Burne-Jones in each volume.

On the recto of leaf 2 is the printed note: "[Printer's ornament.] These two trial pages of the projected edition of Lord Berners' translation of Froissart were printed at the Kelmscott Press in September, 1897, to preserve the designs made for the work by William Morris [Printer's ornament.] In the border are the arms of France, the Empire, and England; on the second page are those of Reginald Lord Cobham, Sir Walter Manny, and Sir John Chandos."

CONDITION: 4°, gray boards, linen back, uncut, with the bookplate of Jacobus Cowan De Rosshall.

FIRST EDITION.

COLLATION: Title as above, [a1] (verso blank), pp. [i]-[ii]; "Foreword," [a2] (verso blank), pp. iii-[iv]; "Preface, Being Extracts From An Article By William Morris," a3 (misprinted a2)-[a5] (recto), pp. v-ix; "A List Of The Woodcuts . . . Reproduced In This Book," [a5] (verso)-[a6] (verso blank), pp. x-[xii]; Thirty-five woodcuts, twenty-three leaves (verso of each leaf blank), without signature marks, and numbered 1-23; "List Of The Principal Books Of The Fifteenth Century, Containing Woodcuts, In The Library Of The Late William Morris," seven leaves, colophon as above on last leaf (verso large Kelmscott device and "Sold by the Trustees of the late William Morris at the Kelmscott Press"), pp. 24-[37].

Excepting the six leaves of preliminary matter, this book is without signature marks.

225 copies were printed in Golden type, in black and red.

ILLUSTRATIONS: Thirty-five woodcuts on twenty-three leaves. Twenty-nine of these woodcuts were chosen by Mr. Morris to illustrate a catalogue of his library, and the other six were prepared for an article in Number 4 of "Bibliographica," part of which is reprinted as an introduction to this book. The process blocks (with one exception) are by Walker and Boutall.

MISCELLANEOUS LEAFLETS.

1. Hammersmith Socialist Society.

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

Invitation to the annual gathering. Small oblong folding slip.

Two forms of invitation were issued in Golden type, dated Jan. 30, 1892, and Feb. 11, 1893.

2. Ancoats Brotherhood.

Leaflet of 4 pages.

2500 copies were issued in Golden type.

On the first page is the frontispiece from the Kelmscott Press edition of "A Dream of John Ball." Dated March, 1894.

3. Address to Sir Lowthian Bell, Bart.

Small 4°, 8 pages.

250 copies on paper and 2 on vellum were issued, all in Golden type.

This address, dated June 30, 1894, is from the employés of Sir Lowthian.

4. An American Memorial To Keats.

Leaflet of 4 pages, of which the first is printed. Small 4°.

750 copies were issued in Golden type.

The text begins with a large woodcut initial.

On this occasion, July 16, 1894, there was unveiled, in the Parish Church at Hampstead, the first memorial to the poet John Keats upon English ground. The bust of the poet, executed in marble, was the work of Miss Anne Whitney, of Boston. The American donors were nearly a hundred persons, and it is of much interest to observe that at this ceremony they were represented by Bret Harte. It was received on behalf of English men of letters by Mr. Edmund Gosse.

5. Memorial to Dr. Thomas Sadler.

Printed slip.

450 copies were issued in Golden type.

This slip gives the text of the memorial tablet to Dr. Sadler, which was unveiled in Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead, Nov., 1894.

6. Scholarship certificates for the Technical Education Board of the London County Council.

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

Oblong 4°, printed on one side.

12 to 2500 copies were issued in Golden type.

These certificates were printed within the oblong woodcut borders that had been designed for the illustrations in "Chaucer." One of these borders was not used in the book, and this is its only appearance. The first certificate was printed in Nov., 1894, and was followed in Jan., 1896, by eleven certificates; in Jan., 1897, by six certificates; and in Feb., 1898, by eleven certificates, all differently worded.

7. Kelmscott Press Annual Wayzgoose Programmes.

Variously issued for the years 1892-1895.

These were printed without supervision from Mr. Morris.

8. Specimen of three types of Strange's Alphabets.

2000 ordinary copies, and 60 on large paper were issued.

These were used at the Press for insertion in the first edition of "Strange's Alphabets." Issued March, 1895.

9. The Deaconess Institution for the Diocese of Rochester, 83 North Side, Clapham Common. Associates Card.

250 copies were issued in Chaucer and Troy type.

One side of this card is printed in Chaucer type; on the other there is a prayer in the Troy type enclosed in a small border which was not used elsewhere. It was designed for the illustrations of a projected edition of "The House of the Wolfings." This card appeared April, 1897.

for his dinner: the clerk without any trouble in his face, put his hand into his desk, and drew out a derringer, wherewith he covered the new-comer and said in a calm historic voice: Stranger, you will not have chicken, you will have hash.

"This story you seem to have forgotten. So I will apply it, and say that you will have the Kelmscott books as they come out. In short you will have hash because it would upset me very much if you did not have a share in my 'larx.'

"As to the Olaf Saga, I had forgotten what you had had; chiefly I think because I did not prize the big-paper copies much. They were done in the days of ignorance, before the Kelmscott Press was, though hard on the time when it began.

Of The Friendship Of Amis And Amile.

The Wood Beyond The World.

Proof of one of the ornamental borders used therein.

Chaucer Prologue.

Trial essay of the first page (verso blank). Folio.

In this essay the small initial "B" differs with the one which was finally adopted. The text of the first line reads, "That Aprille whit his shoures soote," and each column of text contains one line more than in the published work.

Chaucer Prologue.

Another trial essay of the first leaf. The first line of the text reads, "That Aprille with his shoures soote." Each column on the recto contains one line more, and each on the verso one line less than in the published work. The ornamental decorations agree, as also do the capitals with the exception of the fourth on the verso.

Chaucer.

Trial pull of page 22 before final correction of the word "Attheon," which herein is "Aetheon." This proof was pulled before the insertion of the small capital in the second column. On the lower margin is a lengthy MS. note on the method of spelling the word "Attheon."

Chaucer.

Pull of large ornamental initial-word "Thou," used in the "Legend of Goode Wimmen," on pages 430 and 441.

Chaucer.

Trial pull on handmade paper of Tudor rose border, which appears on page 91 and is many times repeated. On the margin is the pencilled date "Nov. 25, 1896."

Chaucer.

Trial pull on handmade paper of Grapevine border, which appears on page 138, and is many times repeated.

Chaucer.

Proofs of initials "A" and "B" used in Chaucer. The "A" occurs on page 37; the "B" occurs on page 138 and both have been used elsewhere.

Laudes Beatae Mariae Virginis.

Note to "Laudes Beatae Mariae Virginis."

Oblong slip printed in Chaucer type, dated Dec. 28th, 1896 (verso blank). This note was sent out to the subscribers for insertion in the work. It contains the observations of the Reverend E. S. Dewick who has pointed out that these poems were printed at Tegernsee in 1579, with the title, "Psalterium Divae Virginis Mariæ."

Envelope, official-size with the embossed half-penny postage stamp, and the printed superscription, "From the Kelmscott Press, Upper Mall, Hammersmith, W."

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

Other announcements, trial leaves, specimen pages, etc., are in existence, but the collection of such specimens would be as futile as descriptions thereof would be impossible. Elsewhere the most extensive notes upon these leaflets are those which are made by Mr. S. C. Cockerell in "A Note By William Morris On . . . The Kelmscott Press," 1898, pp. 59-61.

ORIGINAL DESIGNS BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

The Golden Legend.

Original drawing in black and white for title-page. This design which is unfinished was subsequently rejected. On the margin in the autograph of Mr. Cockerell is the note, "Discarded design by William Morris for the Kelmscott Press. S C C."

Utopia.

Signature beginning with page 81, on which is an original drawing in black and white of an ornamental half-border. On the margin in the autograph of Mr. Cockerell is the note, "Original design by William Morris, S C C."

Of The Friendship Of Amis And Amile.

Specimen page of the ornamental title-page with the original design of the title drawn in the blank space. On the margin in his autograph Mr. Morris has written: "My dear Mr. Hooper the block is very ragged & so I suppose is my drawing: but I think you can see what I mean W M."

The Well At The World's End.

Original drawing in black and white of marginal ornament for page 15 of the printed text. The design was subsequently rejected as was also a small pencilled ornament, and the page was reset. On the margin in the autograph of Mr. Cockerell is the note, "Original design by William Morris Well at the World's End p. 252 (?) S C C."

Chaucer.

Original drawing in black and white of the word "Thou" as used in the "Legend of Goode Wimmen," pp. 430 and 441. On the margin in the autograph of Mr. Cockerell is the note, "Original design by William Morris for the K. P. Chaucer, S C C."

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

Chaucer.

Original drawing in black and white of full-page ornamental border used in "Troilus and Criseyde," on pages 470, 471, 518, and 519. On the margin in the autograph of Mr. Cockerell is the note, "Original design by William Morris for the Kelmscott Press Chaucer, S C C."

Chaucer.

Original drawings in black and white of three initials used in the Chaucer. On the margin in the autograph of Mr. Cockerell is the note, "Original designs by William Morris S C C."

Chaucer.

Original drawing in black and white of frame used for some of the illustrations of Sir Edward Burne-Jones in the "Chaucer."

The Earthly Paradise.

Proof of page 91, of Vol. I, containing an original drawing in black and white of an elaborate marginal decoration. This design was subsequently rejected as also was the printed initial in the text. On the margin in the autograph of Mr. Cockerell is the note, "Original design by William Morris, S C C," and the date, "Oct 22nd, 1895."

The Earthly Paradise.

Original drawing in black and white of a border for "The Earthly Paradise." On the margin are the inscriptions in the autograph of Mr. Cockerell, "Posted to W. Spielmeier Feb. 6, 1896" and "Original design for the Kelmscott Press Earthly Paradise by William Morris, S C C."

Original drawing in black and white of the border used on the Deaconess Institution Card.

Original drawings in black and white of five marginal ornaments and one half-border. On the margin in the autograph of Mr. Cockerell is the note, "Original designs by William Morris, S C C."

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

Original drawings in black and white of four small initials used in the Kelmscott books.

The Doves Press
Salve Aeternum Aeternumque Vale
T. J. Cobden-Sanderson

THE DOVES PRESS was founded in 1900 to attack the problem of Typography as presented by ordinary Books in the various forms of Prose, Verse, and Dialogue and, keeping always in view the principles laid down in the Book Beautiful, to attempt its solution by the simple arrangement of the whole Book, as a whole, with due regard to its parts and to the emphasis of its capital divisions rather than by the addition & splendour of applied ornament.

II

The Books selected for this purpose have been chosen partly for the sake of the particular typographical problems presented by them, but partly also in view of the second object of the Press, viz., to print in a suitable form some of the great literary achievements of man's creative or constructive genius. To-day there is an immense reproduction in forms at once admirable & cheap of all books which in any language have stood the test of time. But such reproduction is not a substitute for the more monumental production of the same books, and such a production, expressive of man's admiration, is a legitimate ambition of the Printing Press & of some Press the imperative duty.

III

of English Literature, if not of English thought. On the other hand PARADISE LOST—"a unique monument of the English language"—is a sublime attempt of English Puritanism to "justify the wayes of God to men." FAUST reopens the eternal debate between the unseen and the seen, the finite & the infinite: and SARTOR RESARTUS, EMERSON'S ESSAYS, and UNTO THIS LAST are attempts to transform the EVERLASTING NO of scepticism into the EVERLASTING YEA of affirmation, and amid the inexplicable and enshrouding mysteries of the infinite—of God, of Nature, and of the Soul—to set man again at work upon the creation of the Fit, the Seemly, and the Beautiful. MEN & WOMEN and DRAMATIS PERSONAE are poetical presentments of the same positive position. These works together constitute the main argument of the selection. Other like sequences are the POEMS and PLAYS of SHAKESPEARE, preluded by the earlier imagined PERVIGILIUM VENERIS, and the POEMS of GOETHE, WORDSWORTH, SHELLEY, & KEATS.

HUMBOLDT'S COSMOS, which I had intended to print, I have abandoned. It was too great an enterprise for The Doves Press under present circumstances. But I have retained the name, COSMOS, in the Catalogue and have affixed to it an asterisk to indicate that its place is vacant. In some happier time perhaps, when man is again at peace with man, the COSMOS will be re-imagined and, monumentally printed at some future Press, be placed, as it should be placed, at the front of all human thought and aspiration.

IV

But beyond the immediate purposes of the Press—the solution of typographical problems and the monumental presentment of some of the literary creations of genius—there has always been another and a much greater purpose, of which workmanship achieved in the great fields of literary creation and its incorporation in printed forms may, like other objects of craftsmanship, be a Prefatory Note, an Illustration, & an Encouragement—the Workmanship of Life in Life itself, and its embodiment in forms of life which shall be as beautiful in life as, in imagination, are the happiest inventions of imaginative genius. This workmanship of life in life it was sought to advance, in however slight a degree, and to illustrate in the workmanship of the Press: a workmanship of life than all we can imagine immeasurably more important, for immeasurably more important than all that we can imagine is the Reality of Reality, the Reality which is Life. In the beginning God created Life, and the Life was with God, and the Life was God. And it is this Life, this Life of each and of all of us, which in the language of the Press we must COMPOSE, and in the language of the Publisher PUBLISH.

It was thus that, in printing, and binding, Books, not Books alone were the object of the Press, but the creation, as by another hand are created the flowers of the field and of the hedgerows, of something of that Order and of that Beauty which, on the great scale, it is the business of life on the great scale to create; as it has been the business of the unseen on a great scale to create the universe. This creation of life on the great scale of great things has been the ultimate object aimed at by similitude in the creation of the small things which have been the creation of the Press.

VI

Nor does life on the great scale cease with its creation. But as the creation of books, printed and bound, passes, as a seed for the sowing, into life on the great scale, so shall life on the great scale,

The Clowd-capt Towres, the gorgeous Pallaces,
The solemne Temples, the great Globe itself, yea, the very universe and all which it inherit, be carried over, itself only a seed for the sowing, into infinitude, and, on the tides of eternity, so for ever on, before the ever-expanding gaze of man.

In my penultimate farewell in 1913 I said that in closing the Press I should devote myself to "far other tasks." In a sense this will be true: but essentially my interests in life and in life's tasks will remain the same, though probably a great silence will now take the place of The Doves Press, a great silence that I may the more intimately listen to and perhaps overhear the voice—which indeed is never silent, if seldom listened for or distinguished amid the wild and unintelligible strife which is man's life to-day—the voice which is the aspiration of the universe and, in a great silence, is addressed to the soul. In this silence, listening, even now I seem to see arise on the far horizon of life's long vigil the shining summits of a great new world—a great new order touched with beauty and inflamed with a great delight—man's ultimate and infinite ideal. And with this New World trembling into life I put to the shutters and close the doors of the Press, and, turning the key in the lock, bid farewell to THE DOVES PRESS—for ever.

VIII

In thus saying farewell to the Press I say it also, a grateful farewell, to all who have assisted the Press, have encouraged it, worked for it, subscribed; friends and fellow-craftsmen, known and unknown, to all
